Worlds apart, their fates were intertwined... Hunted by a beast of the likes she didn't understand, Gabriella Shannon had lost everything she loved. The only thing she had left was a scrap of parchment with strange writing on it given to her by her father. Forced from all that was familiar, she was help and adrift on the dark Irish Sea—it seemed that is where she would die. However, the universe had laid a different fate for her. Gabriella would soon find herself choosing between placing her trust in a handsome, charismatic man who was wanted throughout Europe and a ship full of pirates or surrendering to a two-century-old Vampire Lord and his relent pursuit of her. Captain Delacroix knew there was something familiar about the girl the moment he pulled her from the sea. He had no idea the girl atop the makeshift raft, bucking waves against the hull of his ship, would turn out to be his destiny.

This delicate Irish girl, her mysterious past, and the torrent of trouble she brought with her would soon consume everything he coveted, including his heart. He felt compelled to protect this girl, his treasure, no matter the cost—even if the price was to be his life. Lord Draven Valentin had finally found her, his only love. He had all but succumbed to end heartache and loneliness as he searched for what seemed like eternities. And now, with his gaunt underling by his side, he would indeed claim her and destroy anyone that stood in his way. Pulling the girl from her protector would be no easy task and a battle, like no other, would follow in its wake.

Un James Delacroix could figure out the significance of that small scrap of paper Gabriella coveted and figure out a way to stop this evil from stealing his prize, she would be lost to him and this life forever.
