I was raised in a city where there were no handouts. You had to take what you could get; even when it came to men. As a woman, I stay in my place and make sure that my man is happy. I live that fantasy life where everything is perfect.

I am the queen of my castle with my knight and shining armor. My man loves me. I'm twenty-eight with a body that any woman would kill for. My hips are like the edges of a Coca-Cola bottle. My skin is like chocolate cake batter; smooth and dark. My hair, you might as well say I got Indian in my family. I got two of the most beautiful children that God would allow a person to have. My marriage is the dream that every woman sees themselves in. I am happy. Dreams are shit. Then, you wake up.
