The Disorder Joanna's not in a room, but she's not in the open either. She's surrounded by a nothing that seems like something. What appears to be the walls, the ceiling, the floor – they appear to be meticulously painted a shade of humble black, but she does not know for sure if they are even walls, or a ceiling, or a floor. Her eyes open, but still she sees the insides of her eyelids – pulsing, quivering. She sits up slowly from her prone position, but it is as if she had never moved at all, the surroundings not changing with her. She looks around, but still she sees the blackness that lines her eyelids when she closes her eyes. horror anthology, hybrid, scary short stories, scary stories to tell in the dark, horror teen books, whisper in the dark, adult horror stories
